JUSTIFICATION:

The United States' K-12 public school system has undergone an intense round of reform over the past decade or so as a consequence of state and federal legislation aimed at institutionalizing standards-based curriculum and instruction in the context of high-stakes accountability measures in order to ensure access to core curriculum for all students. Therefore, it is critical that teachers understand the processes whereby state and federal governments construct education policy as well as the structures and organizations that cause these policies to be made manifest in the everyday work of teachers in classrooms

NEW COURSE DESCRIPTION: (Not to exceed 80 words, and language should conform to catalog copy. See <http://www.csus.edu/acad/univmanual/crspsl.htm> - Guidelines for Catalog Course Description)

Beginning with an historical framework of reform, the course examines theories and models of school reform in the US and international contexts. Students engage in researching and identifying how political and social forces impact the development of educational policy and reform initiatives. Using the lens of contemporary reform, students analyze recent school reform initiatives as well as the ideas and ideals of professional development within their own educational contexts.
