WORK CONTINUES

New Buildings and Expansions Planned

Expanding enrollment, flourishing programs and successful University-community partnerships are inspiring a continuing CSUS building boom.

Over the next three to 10 years, CSUS plans to build eight new buildings, or expansions to existing facilities, both on- and off-campus. Four will be built completely or in part through private funds, and all are designed to enhance the lives of the University's students and the citizens of the Capital Region.

The growth highlights the University's commitment to the area's physical, economic and cultural health.

The projects include:

Performing Arts Complex:

Recognizing the need for a first-rate performance venue for regional and University arts groups, the University and the City of Sacramento are working together to build a performing arts complex in the heart of Sacramento. The town and gown combination will bolster the city's reputation as an arts destination and exemplifies the University's ongoing commitment to programs of mutual benefit to the University and the community.

The nearly 50,000 square-foot facility, with adjacent parking, will substantially increase the amount of performance space now available for campus and community arts groups and improve the region's ability to draw big-name talent. Plans call for a 1,300-seat auditorium with support space, including a lobby, reception area, restrooms, a box office, dressing and make-up rooms and green rooms for performers.

It will also offer ample opportunities for learning with rehearsal labs, a scenery shop, a lecture room, nine faculty offices, two teaching labs, stage/set areas and lighting/audio control rooms.

The total cost for construction and equipment, not including land purchase, is expected to be $26.2 million, which will come from donations.

For more information, call the Office of University Affairs, at (916) 278-7043.

Aquatic Center Expansion:

In partnership with the California

Department of Boating and Waterways, the University is embarking on a significant upgrade of the CSUS Aquatic Center at Lake Natoma. The first phase of the project will include two boat storage areas, classroom and meeting space, and new docking facilities. Concrete pedestrian walkways, asphalt driveway turnarounds and improved water and sewer connections will also be included. A second phase will include improved beach access and an additional instruction and administration building.

In addition to providing classes for CSUS students and athletic facilities for the University's rowing and water-ski teams, the Center functions as a community resource, offering training and recreational opportunities such as boating safety classes and kayak rentals for local residents. Center operators see the facility as a "community center with access to water."

The two phases of the project are expected to cost about $6 million, $200,000 of which the University will attempt to raise privately. For more information call Craig Perez, director of development for the Aquatic Center, at (916) 985-7239.

Job Market Challenges Campus

It's a tight labor market, and employers throughout the state are feeling the pinch.

CSUS is no exception. Low employment combined with large numbers of retirements and promotions on campus have kept the faculty and staff affairs office scrambling this fiscal year.

Dolores Lackey, staff employment manager at CSUS, puts it in perspective with one simple statistic: There have been 154 "requests to advertise" for staff vacancies this year so far, up 35 percent from the year before at this time.

"It's just been incredibly busy. I can't believe the number of new job postings every week," Lackey says. In addition, the staff employment office handles the task of hiring and placing temporary staff to fill vacancies until new hires are made.

And even as the number of positions advertised is increasing, the number of applicants for available positions is declining.

Numbers compiled from the last fiscal year show the University received about 4,000 applications for staff positions. That was down about 1,000 from the year before even though the number of openings was increasing during that time.

The office will also process about 2,500 personnel transaction forms this year, covering a variety of personnel actions.

To keep up, the office has increasingly taken advantage of the Internet. Lackey says her office's use of the Internet as a recruiting tool couldn't have come at a better time.

In recent months the staff employment website has been getting about 6,400 hits each month. The staff employment application, which can be downloaded at the site, has been averaging 825 hits each month.

"It's hard to believe that, prior to 1996, when we first started placing our staff vacancies on the Internet, we relied on a weekly bulk mailing of our staff vacancies to universities and other agencies statewide," Lackey says. "The use of the Internet has allowed us literally to reach applicants around the world, although the majority of our applications still come from California."

Staff vacancies are also listed on a telephone job line, and advertised in newspapers and journals when needed.

Various CSUS employment websites, including the staff employment site and the faculty and administrative employment site, may be accessed at www.csus.edu/webpages/employment.htm.

Member of 'Little Rock Nine' to Talk at CSUS

Sept. 23, 1957 was no ordinary day for Terrence Roberts and eight other teenagers in Little Rock, Ark. Enduring unspeakable hatred, these courageous nine students were the first African Americans in the country to attend a desegregated high school.

Known as the "The Little Rock Nine," the students faced daily physical and verbal assaults, as well as death threats, and had to be escorted to classes by United States Army troops.

Roberts will discuss his "Little Rock Nine" experience, his personal fight to make America less racist and the harassment he has suffered in the cause of civil rights. His talk will be at CSUS at 4 p.m., Wednesday, Feb. 21 at the Multi-Cultural Center, located in the library 1010.

Roberts received his bachelor's degree from CSU Los Angeles, his master's degree from UCLA and his doctorate in psychology from Southern Illinois University. He is currently the chair of the psychology program at Antioch University in Los Angeles, in addition to managing his own private practice.

For more information call 278-6101.

Info Facts

62 percent of CSUS students surveyed by Institutional Studies said a state-supported summer term would help them reach their educational goals. That's up from 36 percent five years earlier.

Professional Activities

The CSUS Bulletin welcomes submissions to the Professional Activities section from faculty, administration and staff. Items are run on a space available basis. They should be no longer than 75 words and may be submitted to bulletin@csus.edu or faxed to 278-5290.

New Faces

Since "wish-granter" would look funny on a business card, Sheila Hard goes by director of major gifts and planned giving instead. In her new position in the CSUS Office of University Advancement, Hard says she helps people "do what they want to do" when it comes to donating money to the University.

The major gifts part of the job is mostly a matter of matching a donor's charitable interest to a campus need, Hard says. Planned gifts, on the other hand, often have a large tax component attached. The goal is to find the most tax efficient means for the donor to make a contribution to the University.

"I don't advise people. I give them as much information about options as possible so that can take it to their financial advisors," Hard says.

Gifts are rarely "cookie-cutter," she says. Most require specialized approaches because people's situations can be very different. A particular type of gift may work for one person but not for another.

Originally from Sacramento, Hard has been involved in planned giving for 12 years, most recently at UC Berkeley. "One of the great things about the job is that even though I've been doing planned giving for a long time, I learn new things all the time," she says.

Hard has only been on the job at CSUS a few weeks and already has a long list of potential donors. "A large number of people want to give to the University. It bodes well for CSUS," she says.

"The biggest challenge may be reaching all the interested donors. It's a nice problem to have."

If they want to give a gift to CSUS, Hard says it helps if they've given some thought to what they want to do – what program they might want to contribute to, what kind of benefit they might want. But they don't have to have all the answers coming in. "That's what we're here for," she says.

When she's not hitting the calculator Hard likes to hit the ice. She took up figure skating at 33 and competed at the Adult Nationals in 1997 in San Jose. Though she didn't make anyone forget Kristi Yamaguchi – coming in last and next to last in her events – it was worth it. "I had a blast," she says.

Hard has a bachelor's degree in German and religious studies from CSU Fullerton, a master's degree from Harvard Divinity School and completed coursework towards a doctorate at the Graduate Theological Union.

Event Celebrates Life of Primrose

David Dalton, a long time associate and former student of violist William Primrose, will present a lecture and demonstration highlighting the life and career of his former teacher at 7 p.m., Monday, Feb. 19 in Capistrano 151.

Primrose, who lived through most of the 20th Century, was considered by many to be the world's foremost solo violist. The presentation will include excerpts from TV documentaries featuring Primrose talking about the viola and its history, introductory lessons, and performances.

Dalton is a professor emeritus of Brigham Young University with degrees from the Eastman School of Music and Indiana University, where he studied with Primrose. President of the American Viola Society for 15 years, Dalton has had editions and transcriptions for viola published by C.F. Peters, G. Schirmer, and the Oxford University Press.

The concert will take place in Capistrano Hall 151.

For more information about the concert, call 278-5155.

Campus Growth

to accommodate 10 additional nursing students each semester. The Nursing Resource Center, adjacent to the current building, will house equipment and a literature and tape library. The University hopes to raise $75,000 to fund the project. For information call Aileen Ross, director of development for the College of Health and Human Services, at 278-5024.

Tahoe Hall Annex:

Graduate students will soon have a place to call their own in the College of Business Administration. Plans are underway for a 20,000 square-foot addition to Tahoe Hall.

The new space, on the south side of the building, will provide high-tech, computer-ready classrooms and areas for MBA students and faculty to collaborate on projects, as well as lecture and videoconferencing facilities. It will also serve as an informal meeting place where students can share with each other what they're learning in the classroom, discuss business trends with faculty outside office hours and interact with business leaders.

The cost for construction is expected to be $4 million. The University hopes to raise 60 percent of those funds privately. The expansion is scheduled to be built in 2004.

For more information, call Felicenne Ramey, dean of the College of Business Administration, at 278-6578.

Other Projects:

Several other building projects are also in the pipeline that will be funded by a variety of non-donated funds.

- A 34,000 square-foot Regional and Continuing Education Building on the south end of campus will provide lecture and laboratory space for classes and house RCE's administrative support staff. Currently, most course offerings and administration functions are located off-campus. The estimated cost of the project is $7.2 million and it is scheduled to be completed by August 2002.
- Also on the south end of campus will be a new home for Capital Public Radio. The $4.9 million facility will feature a 23,000 square-foot building with studio and office space for radio stations KXPR and KXJZ Sacramento, KXSR Groveland, KKTO Tahoe City and KUOP Stockton, as well as a broadcast tower. It is expected to be completed by December 2002.
- A four-story, 1,000-space parking facility – Parking Structure II – is planned for the northeast part of campus near the University Union. The $10 million facility, which will be paid for primarily with parking fees, is scheduled to be completed by August 2002.
- Modoc Hall, a 56,000 square-foot office, laboratory and classroom building, will extend the on-campus presence of the U.S. Geological Survey. The building will house USGS administrative offices, as well as the Caltrans Water Quality program and the University's Water Programs. It is scheduled to be completed by December 2002.

Plans are underway for a 20,000 square foot addition on the south of Tahoe Hall, shown here in an artist's rendering.

Spring Job Fair

The Career Center will sponsor a spring job fair from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Job News

A search is underway for an executive director of development to work with the dean of the College of Business Administration and the Office of University Affairs.

The review of applications will begin March 2 and will continue until the position is filled. More information is available at 278-6578.

on Wednesday, Feb. 21 in the University Union Ballroom. More than 125 private sector, government and non-profit employers will be available to discuss internship, volunteer, part-time and seasonal jobs. They will also be able to discuss career opportunities.

Details: 278-6231 or at www.csus.edu/careercenter.

Online Social Science Resources

There will be a series of workshops on Web resources for the social sciences on Monday, March 12, from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Mariposa 1011. The workshops will focus on data that can be analyzed using a statistical package (Survey Documentation and Analysis, or SDA) available online. SDA is easy to learn and can be used without cost by anyone with Web access.

The workshops will also feature the Social Science Teaching Resources Depository and other Web-based techniques to improve quantitative reasoning. They will be conducted by Ed Nelson from CSU Fresno and a number of other CSU faculty members. The workshops are open to all university faculty in the CSU, community colleges, UC, and private colleges and universities.

Registration is at <http://www.csusbak.edu/ssric/itlworkshop>.

Details: Ed Nelson at ednelson@csufresno.edu.

New Printing Process

The University has a new student computer system called PrintSmart. A campus-wide project, PrintSmart is designed to reduce costs caused by increased demand for printing, alleviate student frustration caused by current printing restrictions and reduce wasted resources caused by unnecessary printing.

By the beginning of March the Printsmart system should be in operation in the library and 34 other on-campus locations. Each student's OneCard will allow the student to make up to 100 free prints per semester. After the free pages have been used, students may print additional pages at a cost of 5 cents per page.

Additional information about the system can be found at <http://www.csus.edu/printsmart>.

Rock Talks

The geology department and the U.S. Geological Survey will host a spring colloquium series. Most presentations will be at 4 p.m., Tuesdays in Mendocino 1015. Following each talk there will be a reception in the Placer Hall Commons Room. The topics and speakers will be:

- Feb. 20: "Mercury Contamination from Historic Gold Mining in California," Charlie Alpers and Mike Hunerlach, USGS, Sacramento.
- March 6: "A Tale of Two Lakes: Clear Lake and Lake Tahoe," Francisco Rueda, UC Davis.
- March 20 "The Great Dinosaur Transition: The Early Cretaceous of North America," Frank DeCourten, Sierra College.
- April 3 (University Union, Hinde Auditorium): "Thinking Spatially, and Still Making It Home for Dinner," novelist Sarah Andrews, Sonoma State University geology department.
- April 5: "Satellite Monitoring of Volcanic Activity," William Rose, Michigan Technological University.
- May 3: Senior Thesis Presentations. Details: 278-6337 or 278-3112.

Talk on Native American Ed.

CSUS teacher education professor Jana Noel will talk about the historical concepts of unity and diversity at a cultural solutions seminar, 4:30 - 6 p.m., Monday, Feb. 19 in Mariposa Hall 1001.

Noel's seminar "From Savages to Poets: Changing Conceptions of Unity as Seen in Native American Education," will explore the concepts of unity and diversity and its historical impact on Native American educational practices.

"I want to look at what the process of Native American education has been during the past century," Noel says. "In the 1900s to 1920s the educational focus was on stripping the Native Americans of their identities, and today the emphasis is quite different. It's interesting to see the contrast between what white educators wanted a century ago and what Native American educators want for their children today."

The seminar is part of University's Year of Unity, a campus-wide commitment to promote peace, tolerance and understanding.

Noel came to CSUS this fall from Montana State University, where she taught for nine years. She has published two books about multicultural education and has worked on educational projects with schools in the south-central Los Angeles area and with the Montana Indian reservations.

Noel's academic focus is primarily in educational philosophy and she has served as an evaluator for the California Community Colleges' Equal Opportunity Program and Services and for the Migrant Education Preschool Program in California's Fillmore Unified School District.

Ursula Stanton Memorial

There will be a campus memorial and reception for Ursula Stanton from 2 to 4 p.m. Sunday, March 4 in the University Union Forest Suite.

Stanton was the University’s first food services manager. Hired in 1953, she initially worked on a reduced salary for the young Hornet Foundation.
