GREEN HORNET

Restored Neon Sign Shines in The Hive

Hungry diners at The Hive restaurant in the University Union probably don't realize there's quite a history behind the neon hornet that casts its green light upon their pizza.

The Green Hornet captured in flight there is based on a cartoon character popular in the 1930s and '40s. An early superhero of radio, the Green Hornet had special powers, which included a magical lantern with a green, detecting beam.

The sign was originally built for a World War II Air Force maintenance supervisor who earned a reputation for ferreting out goldbricks. Because of his uncanny knack for discovering the out-of-the-way places where the crew would try to sneak a nap, Harold S. Butler became known as "The Green Hornet."

After the war, Butler and his wife ran a motel, gas station and lunch counter in Bliss, Idaho, which they named "The Green Hornet's Nest." The profusion of trees and flowers Mary Butler planted around the compound created a restful oasis for the construction workers of the Snake River dam project.

Years after the Butlers were gone and the famous lunch counter was closed, a Butler granddaughter, Marijane Anthony, visited the place she had spent many happy summers. Then a CSUS graduate art student, Anthony saw the similarity between her grandfather's Green Hornet and the University mascot, Herky the Hornet. Butler's hornet closely resembled early versions of Herky.

Art professor Kurt von Meier helped Anthony make arrangements to bring the sign to the CSUS art department for restoration in the early '90s.

Today, the redesigned hornet sign sports neon tubing spelling out CSUS.

The Butler family says this is the right place for Harold's sign.

"I just think it's wonderful that we could contribute something, especially something artistic, to the campus," says Anthony. "I think it's absolutely perfect."

Graduation to Feature Bustamante

Lt. Gov. Cruz M. Bustamante will be among the speakers at spring commencement ceremonies, scheduled for May 28 and 29 at Arco Arena. Almost 3,000 graduates and 30,000 guests are expected to attend the seven ceremonies.

Bustamante will address graduates of the College of Social Sciences and Interdisciplinary Studies at a ceremony that begins at 4:30 p.m., May 28. Bustamante, a Democrat from the Central Valley, is the first Latino to serve as speaker of the Assembly and the first Latino elected to statewide office in California in more than 120 years.

Also speaking will be Delon Hampton, president-elect of the American Society of Civil Engineers. He will address graduates of the College of Engineering and Computer Science.

In addition, CSUS alumnus and benefactor Steven Yamshon will receive an honorary doctorate degree from the CSU system during the College of Arts and Letters ceremonies.

Yamshon earned a bachelor's degree in environmental resources from CSUS in 1977. He earned both an MBA from the University of Redlands and a master's degree from UCLA's Anderson Graduate School of Management, and did graduate work at Harvard's Graduate School of Business. He now teaches at UCLA and is president and managing director of Stevens First Principles in Newport Beach, which he founded in 1985.

Last year, Yamshon committed $1 million to help build an alumni center on campus.

The ceremonies are free and open to the public. Parking at Arco Arena is $6.

More information is available by contacting Janice Hayden, commencement coordinator, at 278-4724, or by visiting the commencement website at www.csus.edu/commence/.

President's Fall Address

President Gerth's fall address to the campus community will be at 10 a.m., Aug. 26 in the Music Recital Hall. A gathering for coffee and conversation at 9:30 a.m. will precede the address.

President's Year-End Message

With commencement this week, nearly 4,000 students will join the ranks of CSUS alumni. They will invite thousands of guests to join them for these two days of festivities which spotlight the University. For many of these families this transition is one of the most important in their lives.

Each year at commencement, I ask at some of the ceremonies for the students who are the first members of their family to graduate from college to stand and be recognized. It is a thrilling moment and reaffirms for me, as I hope it does for you, our pivotal role as the "people's university." These ceremonies will be a poignant conclusion to a highly successful year and a time for us to be together one last time until fall. Throughout the year, no matter what differences have arisen, we have continued to work collegially and always to deliver our best to our students.

This year we have grown in many areas. We are offering more methods of delivering education including evening-weekend sequences and new online classes. Faculty have been particularly effective this year in helping students to find meaningful community placements that integrate their classroom learning with practical experience in the field. Our Community Collaboration efforts have grown substantially and our cooperative education program remains the largest in the state. We have been engaged with the Capitol Region in many ways over the year. We sponsored the sesquicentennial Gold Rush lecture series, which has been a huge success. Our Festival of New American Music continued to enjoy national recognition and our spring Festival of the Arts was the best attended ever.

As we enter the new millennium we will continue to see a healthy growth in our student body, driven in part by rapid expansion in the teacher credential program, where we are leaders in the state. For fall our first time student applications have increased, and many students are taking advantage of being able to apply online. The construction of our newest classroom facility, Mariposa Hall, will go a long way in accommodating some of this growth by providing up-to-

Free Summer Concerts Set

The University's free Outdoor Summer Concert Series is back again this summer.

Four out of the five concerts are at the CSUS Outdoor Theater, near the University Library. Free parking for those concerts is available in the parking garage near the music building, and concerts begin at 6:30 p.m.

The July 24 concert, featuring Mumbo Gumbo, takes place at 6 p.m. in the Main Quad, near the J Street entrance. It is co-sponsored by CSUS and the East Sacramento Pops in the Parks Committee.

A new feature this year will be special pre-concerts for children presented by the California Brass. The pre-concerts, which start at 5:45 p.m., take place July 3 and Aug. 21.

The series is presented by the music department and the office of university affairs. More information is available at 278-6156. See page 4 Calendar for dates and times.

LYNN WILCOX, counselor education, had her book, Women and the Holy Quran: A Sufi Perspective, published late last year. It includes historical background and comments on the place of the Holy Quran and hadith within Islam, as well as an appendix including all verses in the Holy Quran specifically mentioning females.

JAY CRAIN, anthropology, and VICKI PEARSON-ROUNDS, research and sponsored projects, have published "A provisional bibliographic list of published materials and manuscripts relating to the Lundayeh-Lun Bawang-Kelabit and related groups of Sarawak, Sabah, Brunei and East Kalimantan" as Volume One in the Occasional Bibliography Series of the Institute for East Asian Studies, University of Malaysia, Sarawak.

SUZANNE GAUGHEN, counselor education, and three graduate students, DEBBIE BERKE, MARGIE KOMATSU, and KYMBERLY REYNOLDS, will participate in the Northern California Group Psychotherapy Society's 14th annual Training Institute in Monterey June 11-13.

CHERYL OSBORNE, nursing, recently presented "Gerontology Education for Today and Tomorrow" to the Mental Health Board, and "Using Experiential Learning Strategies to Sensitize Students About Caregiving Needs" at the Academic Geriatric Resource Program Faculty Development Conference. In May she presented "Blueprint for Successful Longevity" at the UC Davis Women's Health Conference and Wellness Fair; "Chronic Disease: Issues and Opportunities" to the California Association of Home Services for the Aging; and "Residential Care for the Elderly" at a Licensing Training Workshop. She also was involved in the UC Davis Academic Geriatric Resource Center Program review panel in May.

Outstanding Seniors for 1998-99

More than 700 students will graduate with honors this year, and two exceptionally inspirational students have been chosen to receive the 1998-99 Outstanding Senior Award.

Mirjana Milenkovic and Svetlana Novakovsky immigrated to America less than ten years ago. Both say they never dreamed of being selected for such an honor.

Milenkovic came to America from Yugoslavia with her younger sister and parents ten years ago.

When she arrived, she spoke a little English and struggled to help her family adjust to their new surroundings. Before attending CSUS, she completed high school in Sacramento and attended Sacramento City College before deciding to continue her family's tradition of studying economics. Now graduating with a 3.93 grade point average, she already has been accepted into a doctoral economics program at UC Santa Barbara. Her economic concentrations involve women's issues and the environment.

Milenkovic has been busy while studying at the University. She founded the co-ed business fraternity Delta Sigma Phi, works as a bank teller and helps her father with his own business.

"All I want to do is learn and teach. I know that I am going to become a professor and hope to return to teach at a CSU campus within five years," she says.

The Outstanding Senior Award recipients are selected by a committee from the CSUS Alumni Association Board of Directors and is usually presented to one of the academic department nominees. This year two students were selected.

Svetlana Novakovsky, the other awardee, is already working in her profession as a registered nurse for new mothers. She left Moscow eight years ago while pregnant, carrying only two suitcases for herself, her husband and their two children.

She arrived in California and gave birth to her third child in a local hospital that had no one to translate for her. Novakovsky did not realize then that she would one day become that missing translator for other pregnant immigrants.

Raising her family at home was all she thought she could do when she first arrived in California, she says.

Novakovsky encouraged her husband with his career and helped him with his homework as he learned English. When her mother arrived from the Ukraine later that first year to help care for the children, Novakovsky began her own studies.

Svetlana Novakovsky

She realized that learning in American schools was not that different than learning in her native country.

"Science is science in any language," she says. "H₂O is H₂O whether you speak Ukrainian or English."

Earning her degree was not easy. Several times she applied to community college programs which admit by lottery, but she was never selected. When she finally enrolled at CSUS she says she was initially overwhelmed by the high quality of the students.

Novakovsky overcame her fears and at the end of the fall 1998 semester was at the top of her class. In addition to her studies, she maintained her connection to the Russian community by volunteering with doctors as a translator and raised her children, now totaling five, ages 4 to 13 years.

Both seniors received their awards at the Honors Convocation on April 24.

date computer learning facilities and much-needed faculty office space.

As the year comes to a close, I want to thank each of you for your many efforts to help our students in so many ways. "Service First" is making a difference and is a tribute to our student centeredness and concern.

Our new graduates will become the leaders responsible for this region's growth and vitality, just as their predecessors have. What they learned from us is not just content based, but also how to act toward each other as they go through life. Our campus community has so much to offer them in that respect, and many of you work hard to bring them these skills, from thirty years of effort in the Educational Opportunity Program to Cooper-Woodson and the College Assistance Migrant Program. This summer some of our students will have the opportunity to travel to Ghana, where they will work with fellow students in learning and sharing conflict resolution skills. What could be a better example of the role of a university like ours in the world?

CSUS Honors 38-Year First-Grade Teacher

Patty Waggoner-Yamat graduated from CSUS in 1961 and walked right into a first-grade classroom at Westfield Village Elementary School.

She loved the work. And though she's since taught at other West Sacramento schools, she's always insisted on being in first-grade. It's her calling, she says — guiding young minds into their first books, helping them discover math, showing them the joys of scientific discovery.

"There's just something so special about first-graders," says Waggoner-Yamat, who now teaches at Bryte Elementary School. "The innocence is still there, and I get to see them learn so much. I just love to see the lights going on, to hear them say 'I can read this' and 'I can write this.'"

Waggoner-Yamat's 38 years of dedication were recognized recently when she was selected as the CSUS Outstanding Alumni Teacher.

Diane Cordero de Noriega, dean of the College of Education, announced the award at Bryte Elementary's "Happy Teachers' Day" assembly. She called Waggoner-Yamat a "special representative of the wonderful teachers educated at CSUS."

The award comes as CSU begins its 1999-2000 theme of "Celebrating Teachers," the first in a planned series of themes celebrating the achievements of more than 2 million CSU alumni.

Patty Waggoner-Yamat, a first-grade teacher at West Sacramento's Bryte Elementary School, has been selected the CSUS Outstanding Alumni Teacher. She and alumni teachers from throughout the CSU system will be honored throughout 1999-2000 as part of the CSU theme of "Celebrating Teachers."

Teachers are being recognized first because of the heritage of many CSU campuses as Normal Schools for future teachers. That tradition continues today, as the CSU system educates more than 60 percent of the state's schoolteachers.

Waggoner-Yamat was born and raised in the Sacramento area. At Washington Unified, her accomplishments have included developing the mentor teacher program and being named the district's Teacher of the Year in 1997. She is president of the Washington Teacher's Association.

If there's a secret to Waggoner-Yamat's classroom success, it may be this: Waggoner-Yamat considers her first-graders members of her family. She tells them as much every day, starting the first day of school when they all stand in a circle holding hands. It's just the sort of attention the children need as they nervously begin school days that seem so much longer and demanding than kindergarten.

And they remember her, many for their entire lives. Every year, former students ranging from new second-graders to adults fully into their careers stop by to visit. Many make sure their children or even grandchildren enroll in Waggoner-Yamat's class. She has officiated at the weddings of two former students.

In nominating Waggoner-Yamat, Washington Unified School District Superintendent Dennis K. Kelleher wrote: "I have had the privilege to know hundreds of marvelous teachers, but none can surpass Patty."

Added Bryte Elementary Principal Linda Langtry: "I am the lucky person who has the privilege of being the principal of the school where Patty 'works her magic' everyday ... I cannot say enough about this woman I have grown to know and am so proud to call friend and colleague."

For her part Waggoner-Yamat, whose last name was Vaughn when she attended CSUS, is a bit shy about all the attention. She says simply that she's been lucky — lucky to have worked so many years in the classroom, lucky to have fellow teachers who support her, and lucky to have worked for a series of good principals.

She and other CSU alumni teachers will be honored at a celebration at the Chancellor's Office, Sept. 13-15.

In addition, the CSU system will use "Celebrating Teachers" to honor its 29 alumni who have been named a California Teacher of the Year. Three CSUS graduates have earned the distinction; Michelle Craig of Yuba City in 1994, Vicky Vigario of Elk Grove in 1995 and Debbie Vigil of Natomas in 1999.

Gerth to be Honored by IAUP in Brussels

This summer in Brussels more than 700 rectors and university presidents affiliated with the International Association of University Presidents will pay tribute to President Donald Gerth as he hands over the reins of the organization to Sven Caspersen, rector of Aalborg University, Denmark. For the past three years Gerth has devoted part of his time to building the association and its programs.

As president-elect he was responsible for the 1996 triennial meeting held in San Francisco, the largest ever for the organization, which featured programs on the application of technology in education. Over the course of his presidency of IAUP, a core activity has been the promotion of the use of telecommunications technologies by educational institutions, including those in developing countries.

Gerth appointed an international commission to assist colleges and universities with the emerging aspects of telecommunications and selected as its chair Ed Walsh, former president of the University of Limerick in Ireland. In one demonstration project that preceded the establishment of the commission an Internet course on economic development was conducted for students from 11 universities in nine countries. The success of this effort led to an additional programmatic focus on internationalizing university curricula and seminars on the role of universities in shaping and developing human resources for Pacific Basin economies. These conferences were held in the U.S., Taiwan, Mexico, Philippines, China and Australia. The internationalization of curriculum focus also led to the consideration of institutional accreditation and quality assurance issues.

Through Gerth's leadership of IAUP, CSUS faculty and staff have been assisting universities around the world through consultation services in the arena of technology-assisted educational delivery.

CSUS faculty have also been involved in other international projects as a result of the IAUP association. For example, Cristy Jensen, of Public Policy and Administration, has led a project on public policy and the legal system in Vladivostok, Russia, offering technical assistance, teaching and program development. Steve Crow of the College of Business has become involved with U.N. activities and research to establish and develop taxation programs in developing countries.

Gerth said among his central goals in assuming the presidency of IAUP was to achieve a strong commitment by the organization to develop the presence of women as educational leaders in higher education around the world and to engage leaders from the African continent in the organization's purposes. To these ends, IAUP has selected Ingrid Moses of the Univer-

Academic Policy Update

President Gerth has taken the following actions regarding recommendations of the Faculty Senate:

From the Faculty Senate Meeting of Feb. 4, 1999:

President Gerth thanked the Senate for its recommendations concerning nominees for the Wang Family Excellence Award.

The recommendation concerning appointments for the Advisory Group regarding the Director of International Programs is accepted. (FS 99-03)

From the Faculty Senate Meeting of Feb. 18, 1999:

The drop policy proposal is approved. The Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs is responsible for implementation. (FS 99-07)

From the Faculty Senate Meeting of Feb. 25, 1999:

The recommendation concerning academic advising is referred to the Provost for implementation. She will work with the Deans and other appropriate individuals to implement the recommendations to increase department advising capability, to make certain that all students are assigned an academic advisor, and to ensure that departments and programs develop procedures to provide all students with accurate and timely advising. Once students are assigned advisors, this information should become part of the official university database (SIS+). Efforts currently underway in the Academic Advising Center, to advise undeclared students, should be continued (FS 99-08).

The program change proposal concerning the baccalaureate degree in business administration is approved. The Provost is responsible for implementation (FS 99-15).

The curriculum review for the Department of Theatre Arts is accepted. The Provost is responsible for implementation (FS 99-16).

The President has received FS 99-03—Writing and Reading in the Undergraduate Program—which describes an approach to strengthening the writing and reading skills of CSUS undergraduates. President Gerth accepts the purpose of the proposal and shares the Senate's commitment to the goals. Provost Koester will distribute the advisory standards to all departments and programs. She will also implement the modifications to the University's Program Review requirements, including the program's assessment plans.

From the Faculty Senate Meeting of March 11, 1999:

The recommendation concerning graduate concentrations is approved. The Provost is responsible for the implementation of this (FS 99-11).

The recommendation concerning the revision of program review procedures is approved. The Provost is responsible for implementation (FS 99-17).

sity of New England, Australia as the new president-elect; and an IAUP African Regional Council has been formed, including vice chancellors and rectors from most sub-Saharan African countries.

Over his tenure the organizational strength of the 35-year-old association has grown substantially. Not only has membership increased, now representing more than 100 countries, but the substantial programs of the organization rival those of the International Association of Universities. "IAUP has become a highly regarded and a credible organization with university presidents and rectors around the world," Gerth said.

Nine regional councils provide programmatic strength for the organization through programs and conferences that address major issues of each region. For example, six conferences on the theme "higher education and human resource development in the Pacific Basin" were convened. The first of these conferences was held at CSUS.

Another major initiative of the association has been a commitment to building peace initiatives and international understanding into university curricula. This project addressed issues related to economic development, conflict resolution, and regional security cooperation. A new program on conflict resolution was established at Bar Ilan University in cooperation with IAUP.

As Gerth winds up his duties for IAUP, he has accepted an appointment to the governing board of the United Nations University in Tokyo. U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan, in his appointment of Gerth, noted his role in support of UNESCO and in the development of international strategies for higher education. He was also appointed to the steering committee for the UNESCO World Conference on Higher Education in Paris last October and was a member of the advisory committee to the Director General of UNESCO.

Gerth remarked that "serving IAUP has been a wonderful experience. Bev and I have visited universities, made new friends who will be with us, and CSUS, for a long time. We are grateful for the experience and hope that CSUS will continue to benefit from this worldwide, university based network of relationships."

25 Earn Leones Scholarships

The Anthony J. Leones Scholarship was awarded to 25 CSUS students for the 1998-99 academic year. The scholarship provides awards of $1,000 to freshmen and transfer students at CSUS. Each recipient is required to participate in a community service internship during the scholarship year.

The scholarship established in 1991 by Sacramentans Angelo and Sofia Tsakopoulos in honor of Sofia's father.

A reception honoring the recipients will be from 4-5:30 p.m., May 27 in the University Union California Suite.

The 1998-99 recipients are: Issac Awuah, Charity Bailey, Raymond Beltran, Nicolas Chavez, Jr., Vickie Dunlap, Maria Guzman, Guadalupe Herrera, Sewit Hezechias, Linda Lugea, Marisa Martinez, Blanca Mendez, Angelica Mendoza, Lady D. Moore, Cher Moua, Marcela Muratalla, Carlos Navarro, Van K. Nguyen, Cindy Perez, Pardeep Sahota, Omaria Salinas, Vasquez Silvia, Tiffany Small, Lucia Zamora, Maricela Zamora, and Sandra Zamora.
