

Budget pact means more students in spring

Sacramento State will be able to accept as many as 600 additional new students in the spring 2005 semester, thanks to additional enrollment funding agreed to by the Governor and Legislature in the state budget.

The 600 new students will be among 7,500 that the 23-campus California State University system will be able to admit in the spring.

The final budget also restored funding for student outreach, academic preparation and educational opportunity programs. And systemwide, the CSU is planning to admit another 10,000 students in the 2005–06 academic year, based on the higher education compact agreement with the governor. Under the compact, the CSU system also will receive a 3 percent increase to its general fund budget for mandatory costs and faculty and staff compensation.

In addition, students will benefit from the restoration of 5,400 competitive Cal Grant awards that were reestablished as part of the budget agreement.

Spring admissions will be a big change from the last couple years, when Sacramento State was forced to tightly limit spring admissions and impose tighter deadline requirements for fall applicants. Enrollment growth came to a halt last fall, and is expected to be flat again this fall.

Earlier this year, as many as 23,000 students were denied access to CSU campuses as the system struggled to find the $297 million in proposed cuts in the governor's initial budget. The CSU has also made significant cuts in student services and programs, and decreased staff and faculty.

The budget picture has brightened considerably.

TRACK RECORD—Hornet Stadium's reputation as a track and field destination was enhanced during the U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials, when images of the campus were shown around the world. It gained further caché when the NCAA awarded Sacramento State its Track and Field Championships through 2007—an unprecedented three straight years.

New leadership in place

The leadership at Sacramento State has a decidedly new look this year, following the retirement of numerous long-time administrators. The people put in place over the summer include the following:

Matthew Altier has been named vice president for capital planning and resource development, and executive director of the CSUS Foundation. He was previously associate vice president for facilities management. As executive director, he replaces Elroy Littlefield, who is retiring after a long career at Sacramento State. In his new dual role, Altier will provide leadership for the CSUS Foundation and its operations, while also continuing to assist in the development and oversight of the campus master plan. That includes planning efforts on campus and at other possible sites such as the Placer County Campus. He will also continue to develop new resources and relationships for future projects.

Phil Hitchcock was given a two-year appointment as the director of School of the Arts. Hitchcock will continue to serve as the director of the University

PHIL HITCHCOCK

Library Gallery, which opened three years ago, and remains responsible for developing the library's overall art collection. He is a professor of art who previously served nine years as chair of the art department. He has also worked as a corporate art consultant for major projects including the Sheraton Grand Sacramento Hotel.

Marion O'Leary has been named interim vice president for University Advancement (formerly University Affairs). He will be responsible for moving Sacramento State forward on the numerous fundraising and community relations goals that have been established over the last year. He will serve in the position while the search continues for a permanent vice president, and will continue to serve as chair of that search committee.

Summer simmered with news

A busy summer on campus included another successful Olympic Track and Field Trials as well as a step forward in the plans for a proposed Sacramento State Placer Campus. The University was also chosen as the site for two major national sports championships and as the new host of a one-of-a-kind legislative education program.

Sacramento State: Championship central

Sacramento State is becoming a major draw for athletic competitions. More than 170,000 people packed Hornet Stadium in July when, for the second consecutive time, the campus was the site for the U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials.

And over the summer, the University was named as the host for two major college competitions in the coming years – the NCAA Rowing Championships and the NCAA Track and Field Championships.

In July, the NCAA track and field committee awarded the 2005, 2006 and 2007 NCAA Division I Outdoor Men's and Women's Track and Field Championships to Sacramento State. It's an amazing run of championship meets for Sacramento, starting with the 2000 U.S. Olympic Trials and continuing with the 2001 Junior Olympics, 2003 NCAA Division I Championships and 2004 Olympic Trials, and now the next three NCAA Championships.

Sacramento State beat out collegiate track powerhouse Texas in the final voting. Also bidding for the 2005–07 championships along with Sacramento and Austin were Carson, Calif.; Eugene, Ore. and Columbus, Ohio.

But Hornet Stadium wasn't the only venue attracting national attention.

The Aquatic Center will again be the site of the NCAA rowing championships in 2005. The Aquatic Center, home facility for the Sacramento State rowing squad, also hosted the event in 1997, 1999 and 2004.

Part of the appeal may be the Center's upgraded facilities. The Aquatic Center has received more than $3 million worth of improvements over the last five years, including a two-story administration building with locker rooms and showers, improved parking areas and a four-bay boathouse.

And, in another coup, the University will be the host school for the NCAA Volleyball Final Four in 2007. The semifinal and championship matches will take place at Arco Arena.

University inks Placer Campus deal

In May, the University and Placer Ranch representatives signed a formal agreement for a gift of land to build a Placer Campus.

The gift of more than 280 acres is at the originally proposed site for the campus that was announced last February. It is located near the juncture of Fiddymont Road and Sunset Blvd. West in South Placer County, in the proposed 2,200 acre development called Placer Ranch that is owned by venture philanthropist Eli Broad.

With the deal signed, University planners will begin putting together proposals for what the new campus will look like. The University has already begun planning the academic program, an effort that includes gathering significant input from residents and from the area's political, community and business leaders. Technology, business and teacher education are expected to be among the priorities.

Student Spotlight

The IEEE STUDENT BRANCH received the 2003 Student Branch membership growth award for outstanding leadership and results in IEEE Region 6, selected among more than 60 student branches spread across 12 Western states, during the IEEE Central Area Meeting and Contests at San Francisco State University. All three CSUS entries won prizes. The "Blue Tooth Enabled Advanced Medical Sensors" project captured first place in the design contest and the Autonomous Race Car "NATCAR" project came in second. Dzifa Duose won third place in the Student Paper Contest for her paper based on the NATCAR design.

Geography student RICH CROSBY was pictured on the

Recognition

JANICE HAYDEN, university ceremonies and visitor relations, has been elected to a second term as President of the Sacramento Chapter of the Society of Government Meeting Professionals for the year 2004-05. As President, Hayden also serves as a member of the National SGMP Chapter President's Roundtable.

DEIDRE SESSOMS, teacher education, has been named director of the Teacher Preparation and Credentials program. Sessoms previously served as a center coordinator for the teacher education department and took a leadership role in responding to new state standards for preparing teachers. She will assume the directorship with the start of the fall semester.

Scholarship

MARIA WINKLER, art, had an article published in the May issue of The Movable Stationery, a quarterly publication of the Movable Book Society. The article, "My Three Favorites," is a comparison of three paper engineers/illustrators who use movement to extend and enrich the stories in their books.

STAN DUNDON, philosophy, was a presenter on an interfaith panel on Mel Gibson's "Passion of the Christ" at Blackford High School in San Jose on May 1.

Other panelists included a professor of sacred scripture from Guadalupe Seminary and the director of The Jewish Federation of Greater San Jose.

ERIC BULL, teacher education, recently presented the paper "How Do Californian Elementary Science Students Perceive Their Classroom Learning Environments?" at the annual meeting of the National Association for Research in Science Teaching, Vancouver, British Columbia.

JANET HECSEH and DEIDRE SESSOMS, teacher education, and colleagues presented "Learning the Craft of Teaching in Urban Schools" at the American Educational Research Association annual meeting in San Diego, April 12-16. Pia L Wong, bilingual/multicultural education, chaired the session

RAFAEL ESCAMILLA, physical therapy, had an abstract entitled "An EMG Analysis of Abdominal Exercises" accepted for presentation at the 2004 Annual Conference and Exposition of the American Physical Therapy Association, held at Chicago in June-July.

CANDACE GREGORY, history, presented a paper on "Mrs. Dives and Mrs. Pauper: Religious Didactic Literature and the English Laywoman," to the Fifteenth-Century Studies Conference at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, on May 4. She also presided over a session on "Medieval Women Religious" at the 39th Annual Congress of Medieval Studies at Western Michigan University on May 7.

DANIEL CLARK OREY, teacher education and learning skills, gave an opening keynote address

"Una Perspectiva Global: Las Etnomatemáticas" and a talk "Ethnomathematics and the Teaching and Learning Of Mathematics from a Multicultural Perspective" at the IV Festival Internacional de Matemática sponsored by Centro Nacional De Alta Tecnología, CENAT in San José, Costa Rica May 6-8. Orey has also been named a Senior Fulbright Specialist Candidate.

JIM HERNANDEZ, criminal justice was a guest speaker at the National Coalition of Motorcyclists in Oklahoma City on May 8 and discussed the possible effects of the Patriot Act on motorcycle clubs.

NANCY SHULOCK, public policy and administration, wrote the final chapter in a newly released publication by the National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education called "Ensuring Access with Quality to California's Community Colleges." The publication was prepared by the National Center for the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation.

MARY BEAL, communication studies, was invited to deliver a paper and give a workshop at the Fifth International Conference on Information Communication Technologies in Education,

July 1-3, on Samos Island, Greece. The topic of the paper was "Encouraging Learning in the Evolving Teaching Environment" and the topic of the workshop was "Anyone Can Build a Website." In 2003 Beal spoke twice at the World Conference on Education Multimedia, Hypermedia and Telecommunications.

BARBARA O'CONNOR, communication studies, was quoted in the Contra Costa Times on Jan. 1, the Orange County Register on Jan. 7, the San Diego Union-Tribune on Jan. 7 and the San Luis Obispo Tribune on Jan. 11 commenting on Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger's political style and agenda. She was quoted in the Jan. 11 Los Angeles Daily News and the Long Beach Press Telegram reviewing the governor's proposed budget and in the Jan. 10 Orange County Register about Lt. Gov. Cruz Bustamante's cautionary introduction of Schwarzenegger. She was also quoted in a Jan. 4 Sacramento Bee article on absentee voting that also appeared in the San Ramon Valley Times, the Los Angeles Daily News, and the Contra Cost Times. She was on KMAX Channel 31 on Feb. 2 talking about Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger's budget bailout bond proposal.

Campus lands top legislative development program

The Center for California Studies at Sacramento State and the University of Southern California's State Capital Center were chosen in May to direct the nation's premier training and development program for legislative staff. The first sessions in Sacramento will be in the summer of 2005.

The program, called the Legislative Staff Management Institute, is the cornerstone of the legislative staff training and development programs offered by the National Conference of State Legislatures. It was created in 1990 to help senior legislative staff from each state expand their abilities in dispute resolution and conflict management, management of the legislative process, policy analysis, strategic planning, information systems, team building and communications.

The Sacramento State-USC partnership competed successfully with some of the most prestigious universities in the nation - the University of Minnesota's Humphrey Institute and the LBJ School of Public Policy at the University of Texas.

Through the institute, the University and USC will offer senior legislative staff from America's state and territorial legislatures opportunities to improve their leadership skills, learn new ideas and best practices, and network with people doing similar legislative work in other states.

Laurel Heffernan has been named acting dean of the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, where she is the student services director.

Nancy Tooker has been named acting dean of the College of Arts and Letters, where she is associate dean.

LAUREL HEFFERNAN

Her appointment follows the retirement of Bill Sullivan as dean.

Carolyn Pittman has been named the interim associate vice president for financial services. She holds the position of University budget officer. Her appointment follows the retirement of Jonathan Self.

Many other leadership changes were announced during the last academic year. They include Ric Brown, who was named vice president for Academic Affairs; Stephen Garcia, who was named vice president for Administration and Business Affairs; Michael Lewis, who was named dean of the College of Education; Sanjay

NANCY TOOKER

Varshney, who was named dean of the College of Business Administration; and Mike Lee, who was named special assistant to president for planning (one- to two-year appointment).

In addition, two programs now report to different vice presidents. Payroll Services is now part of Human Resources, though it remains in the same office - Sacramento Hall 161.

Public Safety now reports to Administration and Business Affairs. That office remains in the Public Safety Building.

Student project details 2,000 years of living

From the first Ford and two World Wars to the Kings in the playoffs – you see a lot when you live more than 100 years. For Sacramento State students the opportunity to transcribe the experiences of local centenarians proved to be an invaluable learning experience.

Gerontology and nursing students interviewed the elders about their outlook on life, their memories and the secrets of their longevity. The results were compiled in a booklet that was handed out at a fundraiser for elder abuse prevention.

Of the more than 140 centenarians Social Security Administration records say live in Sacramento County, nearly 20 were interviewed for this project. And while the students learned a great deal about events of the last century, they learned even more about the people who lived them.

“It was a myth-buster,” says Cheryl Osborne, chair of the University’s gerontology program, noting that nearly all of the interviewees were living on their own or with family rather than in care facilities. “They’re not all sick. Unlike we often see in the media, most were managing well.”

Even though she is pursuing an undergraduate degree in gerontology, meeting a person who was over one hundred was a first for Janelle Thurber, “I’ve never known anyone over 75. Doing the interview gave me a more positive attitude.”

Osborne says this isn’t unusual for students. “They learn about ‘gerontology’ but with this project they got to see it and interact with it. Just because they’re nursing or gerontology students doesn’t mean they don’t have the same biases about seniors that others have.”

With nearly 2,000 years of life experience between them, the stories the elders told offered glimpses of both their pasts and the present.

They tell of careers: Mildred Petersen traveled the Central Valley as the piano player for a dance band while Eva Robinson worked for Selective Service.

And of being at war: Leila Dunn worked as a shipyard electrician in World War II and “Chick” Amsberry had Victory Gardens for both World War I, when he was too young to go, and World War II, when he was too old.

Of coming to America: Mui Chan’s family immigrated from China to escape the Communists. Gregoria Baltran came from the Philippines at age 82. And being Northern Californians: Ina Sutton follows the Kings, Stockton native Mary Edna Hooper, the 49ers. Hooper even got a 105th birthday greeting from her favorite player, Steve Young.

They even reveal the secrets of their long lives: Eva Robinson abstains from drinking and smoking. Charles Amsberry has an occasional dip of chewing tobacco. Ina Sutton swam every day until she was 98.

Osborne hopes to continue the interviews annually and sees them as a potential source of material for future research projects by comparing what they find in their interviews with longevity studies.

A national search is underway for the positions of associate vice president for finance and associate vice president for facilities management.

Applications will be accepted through August 30. For more information on qualifications and application information visit www.csus.edu/fas/vacancies/admvac.htm.

■ CLERY ACT INFORMATION

In accordance with the Jeanne Clery Disclosure of Campus Security Policy and Campus Crime Statistics Act, crime statistics for Sac State are available at www.csus.edu/police/cleryact.htm.

The statistics include crimes reported on campus over the last three years. Crimes reported on off-campus property owned or controlled by Sac State, or on property adjacent to or accessible from campus, are also included.

In addition, the report includes information on campus security policies, crime prevention, crime reporting and other safety matters. Print copies are available in the library or from the public safety or student affairs offices.

Details: 278-6851.

■ READY FOR SOME FOOTBALL?

Sacramento State Athletics needs up to 12 volunteers to assist at the five home games for the 2004 football season. The volunteers will be placed throughout the stadium with five positions in primarily monitoring positions (three on the field and two in the press box area) and a minimum of two ushering positions in the East grandstands.

All volunteers in these positions will be able to see the game plus will receive two season tickets. Volunteers will be required to arrive one hour and 45 minutes prior to game time and remain until approximately the conclusion of the game, approximately 3 hours.

Interested parties should contact events manager Todd Perruccio at 278-4590.

■ BULLETIN SUBMISSIONS

News briefs, events or professional activity items for the Bulletin may be sent to bulletin@csus.edu, or, if necessary, faxed to 278-5290. You can also use the new electronic submission form, available at www.csus.edu/news/sendnews.html. Ideas for feature stories are also welcome.

The Bulletin is published Mondays during the academic year, and is available online at www.csus.edu/bulletin. The deadline for submissions is 10 a.m. the Wednesday before publication. Items are published on a space available basis and are usually edited.

More information is available by calling public affairs at 278-6156.

In memoriam

GENE SAVAGE, who taught music at CSUS for 30 years and founded the University’s annual Festival of New American Music, died on July 15. Dr. Savage was a professor at CSUS from 1968 to 1997, teaching piano and music history. In 1978, he created the nationally known Festival of New American Music, which brings cutting edge talent from around the country to Sacramento. He continued helping with the festival after his retirement.

BERNARD L. HYINK, who served as president of CSUS from 1970 to 1972 and taught for many years at Cal State Fullerton, died at the age of 91. Dr. Hyink was a professor at the University of Redlands in the early 1940s, and later served in the U.S. Civil Service Commission during World War II. In 1956 he taught at the University of Tehran, and he was dean of students at USC from 1957 to 1960. Dr. Hyink then joined the faculty at Cal State Fullerton, served briefly as president at CSUS, and returned to Fullerton before retiring in 1983. He is co-author of the widely used textbook Politics and Government in California.

JAMES J. VITTI, a former assistant football coach and head freshman basketball coach, died July 14 at the age of 85. He was hired by the University’s first president, Guy West, to join the staff in 1955. In his four years on campus, Vitti was instrumental in developing the University’s intramural program and helped pioneer TV sports coverage in Sacramento, orchestrating tumbling demonstrations that were televised locally. He went on to become athletic director for the California Maritime Academy until his retirement.

The Bulletin prints obituaries of Sacramento State employees and retired employees who have recently passed away. These listings are online at the University’s news website, www.csus.edu/news. Out of respect for the families, information appears only at the request of family. A member of the campus community may submit information, but must have the prior approval of a family member and must provide that family member’s contact name and phone number. Photos are not used.

Information should be submitted online at www.csus.edu/news/people/memoriam. For more information, call public affairs at 278-6156.

25 YEAR PROFILE

Ricardo Torres

Ricardo Torres has unearthed what he calls “the fountain of youth”—the University and its people. “I look in the mirror and I see myself getting older, but my inside spirit is still young.”

The educational opportunity program coordinator has worked for the University since 1975, when he started a job with the CSUS Foundation. In 1978 he joined the EOP office. “The University lists my anniversary as 25 years, but it is actually nearly 30. It’s even more than that if you count when I was a student, too” he says.

Torres’ student career began in 1969 when he transferred to the University as an undergraduate. “I remember when the fees were $75 per semester,” he says. He received his degree in ethnic studies and minored in journalism. He then obtained his social science teaching credential and returned to campus for a master’s degree in education. He also earned a bilingual/cross-cultural specialist teaching credential.

“The campus has really grown,” he says. “It’s grown up and out.” He says the surrounding neighborhood also looks much different in 2004 than it did in 1969. “I remember when the school was surrounded by hop fields and pear orchards. There’s so much more development and a lot of houses.”

As much as he likes working for Sac State today, he says the most amazing times on campus were in the early 1970s. Torres was active in various human rights issues. “There was still a lot of concern for civil rights, farm workers, free speech, and anti-war,” he says. He recalls how much he valued traveling around Northern California for protests and demonstrations at Alcatraz, San Francisco State, and People’s Park in Berkeley.

Torres says the methods EOP uses to contact students have changed. Computers alter the way staff connects with people. “Technology has enhanced the communication process. It saves money. We don’t have to mail information. We put the students on e-mail distribution lists.”

Technology notwithstanding, Torres likes the direction the campus is taking. “We’re creating a culture for the University, building a community, getting an identity.” He says that he’s especially impressed by the energy brought by the new President and new faculty. “They bring with them fresh and creative ideas. They bring a lot of new energy, making a big difference. They’re a positive change to the University. The whole transition is good.”

The approved budget restores $40.3 million for modest enrollment growth systemwide. The final $2.45 billion CSU general fund budget means the system took a cut of about $157 million this year. Last year's cut was $311 million.

The CSU budget includes new student fee revenue of about $102 million from 14 percent fee hikes for undergraduates, 20 percent for teacher credential students and 25 percent for graduate students.

That's the third fee increase in three years, but Sacramento State remains a higher education bargain: $1,412 a semester for full-time undergraduates, $1,598 a semester for full-time credential students and $1,655 a semester for full-time graduate students.

The application priority filing period for students seeking spring admission is through Aug. 31. After that, applications will continue to be accepted until available space is filled. Those eligible to apply include freshmen who have not taken college classes since they graduated from high school, upper-division transfer students with at least 56 units, and graduate students. The University is also accepting applications from second bachelor's degree students in areas of critical need (teaching, nursing, speech pathology and audiology, sciences, and engineering).

Applications are available online at www.csumentor.edu. Graduate applicants should contact the graduate studies office at 278-6470. All other applicants can contact 278-7362 for additional information.

NATIVE ART

Works by a dozen of America's most significant contemporary American Indian artists will be on display from Sept. 3 through Nov. 13 in a free show at the University Library Gallery.

The opening reception—set for 5 to 8 p.m., Friday, Sept. 3—will feature performances by Maidu Dancers and Traditionalists, a California native dance group led by Sacramento State professor emeritus and artist Frank LaPena who is of Wintu descent. The show includes art by LaPena as well.

Titled "Images of Identity," the exhibition includes paintings, photos and sculpture by artists Dugan Aguilar, Rick Bartow, Frank Day, Harry Fonseca, Bob Haozous, George Longfish, Judith Lowry, Fritz Scholder, Brian Tripp, Hulleah Tsinhnahjinnie and Frank Tuttle, along with LaPena's work.

An ongoing series of University events is scheduled in connection with the show including a talk by several of the artists at 6 p.m., Thursday, Oct. 14 in the University Union Hinde Auditorium.

La Pena along with Sacramento State anthropology professor Terri Castaneda will curate the groundbreaking exhibition.

"In my imagination is a world my elders have given me. It is beautiful and difficult, and vastly rewarding," says LaPena of the show. "I want to share those stories."

University Library Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday. Admission is free. For more information or group arrangements, contact the gallery at (916) 278-2368.
