FIRST YEAR

Flexibility, Lower Fees In Summer 'Semester'

CSUS will have its first official summer "semester" this year, with more than 80 courses offered at low, state-supported fees.

Because of the state's urgent need for new schoolteachers, many of the summer courses will be in special education and teacher education. There will also be classes in nursing and social work because of shortages in those areas.

In addition, students will be able to choose from 15 of the most popular general education courses and a selection of remedial English and math courses.

Larry Glasmire, assistant to the vice president for student affairs, was tapped to head the "Year-round Operations" effort last December. He says the program's goals are to increase the number of teaching credentials candidates, help students graduate earlier and reduce the need for new classroom space.

"This new semester will be phased in over a number of years," Glasmire says. "Eventually, we expect that most of what is offered in the summer will be at the lower, state-supported rate. But that will be dependent on state funding."

The addition of the summer "semester" follows two years of a pilot summer program at CSUS in which limited courses in teacher preparation were available for reduced fees.

About 800 students are expected to take state-supported summer courses this year, up from the 250 who benefited from reduced fees last summer. Because various campus fees won't be charged, students will pay about $200 less than in the fall and spring semesters – undergraduates fees will be $445 part-time (1-6 units) and $745 full-time (7 or more units), and graduate fees will be $469 part-time and $784 full-time.

Continuing CSUS students, as well as those admitted for the coming fall, are eligible. There may be some financial aid available for qualifying students.

Regional and Continuing Education, meanwhile, will continue to offer hundreds of other self-supporting summer courses. Fees for those courses will be $145 to $187 per unit, depending on the type of course.

The schedule of state-supported summer courses will be available at the end of March, and will be included in a special section of Regional and Continuing Education's summer catalog. The schedule will also be available on the University's website at www.csus.edu.

CSUS was one of 10 CSU campuses that the Chancellor's Office provided with additional funding this year to plan for a summer semester. The opportunity was due in part to the CSUS College of Education's successful pilot programs the last two summers.

Fashion, Fairways and Food in Business

Are khakis considered business casual? Who puts first on a golf green? What's the best way to pick up a lunch check?

Those may not be questions on a final exam. But professors in the CSUS College of Business Administration are making sure their students know the answers – because they may play a role in the students' business futures.

Professors in the management department have developed a new series of seminars to familiarize students with the nuances of the business world. Three sessions this semester focus on essential business skills they might not get in otherwise — proper business dress, golf as a sales tool and the business dining experience.

"These are business skills that fall between the cracks but may prove critical to career success," says management professor Gail Tom. "The topics are fun and different, but they're also very practical. Unlike class material, which a student may put aside until they need it, these are things they can use right away."

"How to Dress for Success" takes place at 7 p.m., Tuesday, March 28 in the University Union California Suite. Karen Lee Ford of Distinctly You will teach students the do's and don'ts of professional and casual dress, including how much income they should spend on a professional wardrobe, what basics to invest in and how much they should spend each year on wardrobe updates. The seminar is sponsored by Lucent Technologies.

Dining etiquette is the focus of "Putting Your Best Fork Forward," which will be at 5 p.m., Wednesday, April 5 in the University Center Restaurant in the University Union. Beyond learning which fork to use, students will get advice from Shirley Willey of Etiquette and Company on what they need to think about when entertaining a client or interviewing for a job. And they will put their training through a test run, eating a meal while dressed in business attire.

Management professor Craig

Kelley leads the "Salesmanship on the Golf Course" Friday mornings at Haggin Oaks Golf Course. In it he is introducing a group of non-golfers to a major forum for conducting business. Along with golf lessons, including golf etiquette, from College of Business Administration alumnus Mike Woods, students get tips on how to make deals on the course. As a "final," the students will test their newfound knowledge by playing a round with salespeople from the Sacramento area.

Future seminars may include social techniques for business functions.

More information is available by calling Gail Tom at 278-6978.

Student Paper Revels In Recent Successes

It's been a good year for the student newspaper at CSUS.

Awards have been rolling in, its new offices in the University Union are filled with the latest technology and the paper's revamped website is a national trendsetter.

In fact, things are going so well at the State Hornet that even the possibility of jail time for editor David Sommers has a positive side, though Sommers himself might doubt that at times.

"It is absolutely an amazing experience around here," Sommers says. "There's so much going on, I just don't know what to expect from day to day. And that's what I love about it."

The recent awards are impressive.

One, related to Sommers' showdown in court, is the James Madison Freedom of Information Award for College Journalism, which was given to the young editor in March by the Northern California chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists

Sommers received the award for refusing a judge's order to turn over the State Hornet's unpublished photographs in a case stemming from arrests at CSUS last year. Sommers insists the paper is protected under the California Shield Law, and his stand has earned him support from several media outlets. The case is pending various reviews.

Just last month, the State Hornet was second among five college papers in the newspaper of the year competition at the Associated Collegiate Press convention in Seattle. In October, it earned a best of show award at the Associated Collegiate Press national convention in Atlanta. And last spring, it earned best news coverage, best front page design and best website awards from the California Intercollegiate Press Association.

Former Presidential Candidate to Speak

Two-time presidential candidate John Anderson will talk on "Strengthening the United Nations" at noon, Monday, April 3 in the University Union Redwood Room.

Anderson ran as the Independent Party candidate for president in 1980 and was on this year's California primary ballot as a candidate for the Reform Party. He served for 20 years in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Currently, Anderson is president and CEO of the World Federalist Association, a non-profit political advocacy group focused on justice and human rights issues on an international level. One of the organization's primary platforms is a campaign for United Nations reform which calls for a variety of measures including support for a standing United Nations peacekeeping force, modifications to the Security Council membership and voting system, and establishment of an international criminal court.

The event is free and open to the public. More information is available at 278-6686.

Pixar Animator Returns Home to Sacramento for Talk

Sacramento native and Pixar Animation Studios animator Bobby Podesta will talk about bringing Toy Story 2 characters Woody and Buzz to life in the Golden Globe Award-winning film during a free event Friday, April 7.

The talk, called "A Pixar Animator's Life" will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the University Union Auditorium during the 8th annual Festival of the Arts (April 1 - 9).

In addition to Toy Story 2, Podesta has also worked on A Bug's Life. He grew up in Sacramento and attended Christian Brothers High School. The Sacramento Bee ran his weekly comic strip in the Sidetracks section from 1991 to 1993.

After high school, Podesta attended the California Institute of the Arts located just north of Los Angeles.

While there, he completed several short films, including the short Smoke..., which earned him an Emmy award. The film went on to play in festivals across the country and in Europe and Canada.

Podesta is currently working on the film Monsters Inc., due out in 2001.

Business Reaccreditation

The College of Business Administration received a reaffirmation of accreditation of its baccalaureate and master's degree programs from the International Association for Management Education, also known as the AACSB. The recommendation from the AACSB's continuing review team was concurred with by the organization's business accreditation committee and was ratified by its board of directors.

The AACSB team commended the College on several points:

- Its "support in critical areas such as library, media services and computer service, both in terms of physical support" and in "working closely with the College."
- The program review process which "focuses on the mission."
- The "dedication of faculty and staff to the learning and support of students."
- The "strong support by the central administration, notably Provost Jolene Koester."
- The "leadership of Dean Felicenne Ramey."
- The "dedicated service and critical thinking provided by the faculty and staff."

Livingston Nominations

The Livingston Lecture Committee invites faculty to nominate a colleague to present "The John C. Livingston Annual Faculty Lecture" in the fall. The faculty member selected as the 2000-01 award recipient will be honored as a distinguished member of the CSUS faculty.

The late Jack Livingston was a teacher, mentor, scholar, colleague, friend, but most of all, an inspiration, to a generation of CSUS faculty and students. Livingston was deeply committed to academic self-governance, co-founding the Statewide Academic Senate, chairing it in 1965. He founded the CSUS Senate, which he chaired in 1970.

In the selection of the Livingston Lecturer, the Committee emphasizes a continuing commitment to the principles espoused by Livingston. The nominee should meet the following criteria: a faculty member who has played an active role in the life of the University including governance, who has displayed a consistent collegiality, and who has shown a strong commitment to students while maintaining an active participation in creative and scholarly activities.

The first faculty lecture, entitled Distinguished Faculty Convocation Address, was presented in 1959 by Livingston. The event was renamed in 1986. Since 1985, award recipients have included: Al Cook, Angus Wright, Lee Nichols, Bob Curry, Bob Metcalf, Perry Weddle, Betty Ch'maj, David Covin, Jack Brackmann, John Connor, Bill Dorman, Juanita Barrena, Erwin Kelly, Otis Scott and Scott Farrand.

A detailed memorandum describing the reasons for the nomination and a copy of the nominee's resume should be forwarded to the committee. Submit nominations by Monday, April 24 to the Faculty Senate Office, Sacramento Hall 254, campus zip code 6036.

For further information contact Janice McPherson at 278-6593.

Award Program

Nominations are being sought for the Administration and Business Affairs Recognition Awards Program.

The program recognizes administration and business affairs managers and staff who exhibit exemplary performance or who provide quality service. To obtain a nomination form or for information on nomination criteria, contact Sarah Whyte at 278-7450 or whytes@csus.edu. The deadline for nominations is Monday, April 3.

River City Days Volunteers

Academic departments are being sought to participate in this year's River City Days on Friday, April 28 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The annual event is an opportunity for the University to showcase its programs, activities, and accomplishments to the general public, including prospective students.

River City Days will feature advising tables, enrollment opportunities and exhibits and demonstrations highlighting departmental programs.

To participate, pick up an activity form by calling the student activities office at 278-6595 or go to the website, www.csus.edu/stac/rivercitydays, where the form can be filled out and electronically sent to the student activities office for review. The deadline to submit a form is Friday, March 31.

Assistance in planning an activity is available by calling Joann Leal in outreach services at 278-4357.

McNair Scholar Applications

Applications are now available for the CSUS McNair Scholars program. The program prepares selected CSUS students with junior or senior standing, who are low-income, first generation college students or who are under-represented in their major area of study, for admission and study at the master's and doctoral degree levels.

Each year, 24 McNair Scholars participate in academic year and summer activities. The application deadline has been extended to Thursday, April 13. Two informational sessions will be held on Thursday, April 6 from 2:30 to 3 p.m. and from 3:30 to 4 p.m. in the University Union Delta Suite.

For information and applications, contact the Educational Equity and Student Retention office in Lassen Hall 3014 or call 278-5118.

Talk on Family Planning in China

Geneticist Marcus Feldman will talk about the "History and Implications of the Chinese Family Planning Program" at noon, Tuesday, April 4 in the University Union Hinde Auditorium.

For the last 10 years, Feldman has been studying the often drastic measures China has undertaken to control its population growth, including one child per family restrictions. Using mathematical models, he's also made predictions about the long-term consequences of such actions on China's workforce, its economy and even its gender balance.

Feldman is the director of Stanford University's Morrison Institute for Population and Resource Studies and is the Wohlford Professor in the School of Humanities and Science. He has published several articles on genetics and evolution.

More information is available at (916) 278-6620.

Graduate Student Funds Available

Graduate Equity Fellowship funds are available to economically disadvantaged CSUS student to assist them in completing a graduate degree. Students are eligible if they are classified or conditionally classified in a master's degree program for 2000-01, have applied for financial aid and meet financial eligibility criteria, have a 2.5 GPA in undergraduate or 3.0 in graduate work, are a California resident and are enrolled on a full-time basis.

Applications are due Friday, March 31 in the Educational Equity and Student Retention office. Applications are available in the Office of Educational Equity and Student Retention, Lassen Hall 3014.

For additional information or applications call 278-6859 or e-mail hafarsk@csus.edu.

Job News

Recruitment has been initiated for the position of interim dean, College of Health and Human Services.

The search is restricted to applications from tenured CSUS faculty. Review of applications will begin on April 3 and will continue until the position is filled. Questions concerning the position should be addressed to Harriet Taniguchi, academic affairs, at 278-7854.

Departments are now recruiting for part-time faculty applicant pools for the Fall 2000 and Spring 2001 semesters. The normal minimum requirement is a master's degree in the subject area, although a doctorate level degree is preferred.

Applicants should send a personal letter stating their interests and qualifications along with a current supporting resumé to the department. A complete listing of anticipated hiring areas is available in each College and department office, and in Faculty and Staff Affairs. Application material must be submitted to the appropriate department no later than 5 p.m., Friday, April 14.

Freedom & Responsibility ...a 30-year perspective

RESPONSIBLE FREEDOM -
The honesty and accountability of universities in addressing their civic responsibilities will be the thrust of a lecture by Sheldon E. Steinbach of the American Council on Education (ACE) at noon, Thursday, April 6 in the University Union Orchard Suite.

The lecture is the fourth in a series on academic freedom sponsored by President Donald R. Gerth. It is free and open to the public.

Steinbach characterizes his talk, "Freedom and Responsibility — A Thirty Year Perspective," as a probing examination of the manner in which universities represent their interests.

Summer 'Semester'

While the focus this year has been on summer session, Glasmire says flexible scheduling options and evening/weekend programs in the fall and spring semesters are also included in the planning effort.

He says the summer session and alternative scheduling will become increasingly important as the University experiences the upcoming crush of new students known as "Tidal Wave II." CSUS has 24,530 students this academic year, up more than 850 from the year before. Campus planners are expecting similar growth next year.

Faculty teaching the summer courses will be paid using the Regional and Continuing Education pay scale, though other options are being developed for future summer sessions. The Faculty Dependent Fee Waiver program and the Employee Fee Waiver program may also be used for the state-supported summer courses.

Newspaper

Sommers and the rest of the State Hornet staff now have their sights set on the big prize — a national Pacemaker Award. That award — the "Pulitzer Prize of college journalism" — is given each year to the top five four-year college newspapers.

"We've won many regional and state awards over the years," Sommers says. "It's just recently that we've been winning national awards, and a Pacemaker is a possibility."

Sommers' enthusiasm is shared by the State Hornet staff. News is produced daily now, and students are working to maintain an impressive new website and convert the State Hornet from a newspaper to a "media operation."

Sommers and his staff now post daily news updates on the website, in addition to putting out a printed paper every week. The new website also has interactive features such as auctions and viewer polls, and more is in the works.

In developing the new website, which has gained national attention, the State Hornet partnered with a local company called Campus Engine. It was the first such venture for the new company.

As part of the deal, the State Hornet received new equipment and its staff received training. The change has expanded the size of the staff, which now includes students from technical and other non-journalism majors, all wanting to get experience in new media and information technology.

"I get calls from student editors at campuses all the time, wanting to know how we've done that with our website," Sommers says. "We're right on the cutting edge."
