CATALOG DESCRIPTION: Comparative inquiry into the nature of global religions. Hinduism, Buddhism, Confucianism, Daoism, Judaism, Christianity and Islam will be studied. Material and social aspects of these religions will be considered along with primary beliefs and practices. The common yearning to experience the divine and the numinous will be emphasized. Prerequisite: GWAR Certification before Fall 09, or WPJ score of 80+, or C or higher grade in ENGL 109M/W, or (C- grade in ENGL 109 M/W or WPJ score 70/71 and ENGL 109X co-requisite). Units: 3.0.

COURSE DESCRIPTION: As noted in the catalog, this course is devoted to examining the religious beliefs and practices of Hinduism, Buddhism, the Chinese religions (Daoism and Confucianism), Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. We will also consider, more briefly, indigenous (primal) traditions and Sikhism. We will explore the historical roots and current manifestations of these traditions, along with their expression in ritual and sacred text or story, and we will attempt to address the ways these traditions affect and are affected by social, economic, ethical, and political issues. The material to be covered in the course will be presented primarily through lecture and reading from your required texts, with classroom discussions and an occasional video intended to enhance your grasp of the material.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES: Our goal is to arrive at an intellectual understanding of the major world religious traditions, and to develop an appreciation for the nature and variety of religious experience in the global community. We will be asking what it means to be religious, and considering the responses to that question that have been formulated over the centuries by the major religious communities of the world. Toward that end, we will need to cultivate an attitude of empathy toward our material; that is, we will try, as best we can given the limits of our own religious and/or cultural presuppositions, to put ourselves in the place of those who practice the traditions we’re studying. What this means is that we shouldn’t be concerned with the question of whether unfamiliar religious beliefs are “true,” or whether unfamiliar religious practices “make sense.” Rather, we should ask about the significance of those beliefs and practices for the people who adhere to them, so that we can come to understand how those beliefs and practices function as ways of putting a given community in touch with what it takes to be supremely important (i.e., sacred). In other words, we don’t need to ask whether there really is a God in order to explore the ways that various people worship God, or the gods. And since many of us in this class undoubtedly worship different gods, or no god at all, it’s important that all of us are willing to bracket the question of truth in religion in favor of questions of meaning. This will allow us better to understand and appreciate the diversity of human religious experience.

In addition, because this is an Advanced Study course, an important objective of the class is to improve your ability to analyze and reflect on complex issues and to write clearly and logically using standard written English. Toward that end, you are required to complete formal, out-of-class writing assignments totaling at least 5000 words over the course of the semester.

At the end of this class you should be able to:
demonstrate a working knowledge of the academic study of religions;
identify and differentiate the key elements of Hindu, Buddhist, Confucian, Daoist, Jewish, Christian, and Islamic beliefs and practices, as well as the beliefs and practices that tend to characterize primal or indigenous religions, and locate those beliefs and practices within their historical and cultural contexts;
describe the place of religions within their historical and cultural contexts; and employ critical reasoning skills in the study of religious traditions through expository/analytical writing assignments based on required readings and material presented in class.

NOTE: For free, one-on-one help with reading and writing in any class, you may visit the University Reading and Writing Center (URWC) in Calaveras 128. The URWC can help you at any stage in your reading and writing processes: coming up with a topic, developing and organizing a draft, understanding difficult texts, or developing strategies to become a better editor. To make an appointment or a series of appointments, visit the URWC in CLV 128. The URWC also offers tutoring for one unit of academic credit through ENGL121. For current URWC hours and more information, visit www.csus.edu/writingcenter.

PREREQUISITES: This course is introductory in nature, and no previous study of religion is required. However, since this is designated as an Advanced Study course, you must have either passed the WPE (prior to July 2009) or received the appropriate GWAR placement (as specified in the “Catalog Description” section, above).

INSTRUCTOR’S EXPECTATIONS: I respect you as students, and in return I expect you to respect me, your fellow students, and the classroom environment. This means, among other things, refraining from the following while in class: eating, sleeping, reading outside materials, having private conversations, leaving and re-entering the classroom (except in the case of an emergency), and using cell phones for any purpose, including texting. In addition, and more importantly, I expect an atmosphere of tolerance and respect for other students’ opinions, and an objective and empathetic response to the material we study together. Observing these guidelines will help ensure a better learning experience for all. If you have any special needs (learning disability, etc.), please provide me with documentation as soon as possible, so I can make every reasonable effort to accommodate you.

PLAGIARISM: Plagiarism is becoming a major problem on this campus, and I will not tolerate it. You are all responsible for familiarizing yourselves with the CSUS policies regarding academic honesty, as well as with guidelines for recognizing and avoiding plagiarism. A helpful source in this regard is found at: http://library.csus.edu/content2.asp?pageID=353. I will return all plagiarized (unoriginal) work ungraded, and you may not be allowed to resubmit the plagiarized assignment. I will spend some time going over my expectations in this regard before your first formal writing assignment is due, and again as needed throughout the semester.

REQUIREMENTS: All students will need to:

• attend class. I will not keep track of your attendance, but the material you’ll be reading for this class is difficult, so the clarification offered in lectures will be crucial. Also, there may be material presented in lectures and class discussions that is not covered in reading assignments, and you will be responsible for that material, too.
• complete all assigned readings by the date for which they are listed on the syllabus. Classroom discussion of the readings is an important part of this course, and you won’t be able to participate in those discussions if you’re not prepared.
• write short informal responses to assigned questions drawn from the readings. Topics for these responses are listed in the syllabus.
write a series of formal papers, of increasing length, in which you respond to an assigned topic; you will have the opportunity to revise one of these papers to improve your grade. I will provide you with more information about these papers, including a complete list of topics, word lengths, and points possible for each assignment, by the third week of class. All papers must be turned in by the due date shown on the syllabus unless other arrangements have been made with me in advance. These assignments are expected to conform to accepted standards of academic usage, and to be free of errors of grammar, spelling, punctuation, etc. I recommend Diana Hacker’s Pocket Style Manual (available in the book store) as a good reference.

- take 1 in-class essay exam (open notes, open book, during final exam week).

GRADING:

- Informal writing 20% (combined)
- Formal writing 60% (combined; point values for individual assignments based on length)
- In-class essay exam 20%

Your final letter grade will be determined according to a standard distribution (i.e., 90 – 100% = A, 80–89% = B, etc.). You may ask about your status in the class at any time.
