DISSERTATION:

The Reading Comprehension Abilities of Children with Attention-Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder

Directed by Jonathan Sandoval, Ph.D. (Chairperson); Carlton Spring, Ph.D.; & Penelope Krener Knapp, M.D.

ABSTRACT: This study compared the reading comprehension abilities of a group of 4th, 5th, and 6th grade children who were previously diagnosed as having Attention-Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD) to a group of carefully matched peers who did not have this disorder. To focus specifically on the effect of ADHD on reading comprehension, variables known to affect this skill were controlled for or measured. It was found that children with ADHD obtained lower reading comprehension test scores than did their peers in the Comparison group. Further, it was found that greater ADHD symptom severity predicted lower reading comprehension test scores. Theoretical explanations for the ADHD group's relative comprehension failures included difficulties with effortful processing, poor focused attention, and learned helplessness. It was concluded that children with ADHD have special reading instructional needs. When compared to children without this disorder, children with ADHD will be at a disadvantage when asked to read for new learning.
