Prestigious academy recognizes kinesiology professor

Maureen Smith, a professor of kinesiology and health science, was inducted this fall into the National Academy of Kinesiology during its 84th annual meeting in Austin, Texas. She was among a dozen U.S. and three international scholars inducted during a special banquet and ceremony.

The National Academy of Kinesiology is an honorary organization composed of Fellows who have made significant and sustained contributions to the field through scholarship and professional service.

The academy’s missions are to encourage and promote the study and educational applications of the art and science of human movement and physical activity, and to honor by election to Fellow those individuals who have contributed significantly to this purpose. They reflect a "who's who" of eminent scholars in the field.
