The Judicial Fellowship Experience

Judicial fellows work for 10 months in courts or Judicial Council offices across California, gaining direct experience in the administration of a complex and changing court environment. Courts do much more than adjudicate cases. In the service of promoting access to justice for everyone, Judicial Fellows are exposed to executive level management and the development of a variety of court programs and departments, multi-million dollar budgets, policy, and other managerial tasks. The special challenge of court administration is to manage these functions in ways that preserve judicial independence and ensure the efficient and fair administration of the law.

Academic and Field Seminar

Judicial Fellows are enrolled as graduate students at Sacramento State and participate in regularly scheduled academic seminar and field seminars throughout the year. Fellows earn 6 units of graduate credit in Public Policy and Administration and complete a Fellowship Project on a topic/issue relative to the Fellows' placement court or office. Upon successful completion of all fellowship components, Fellows earn a graduate certificate in Applied Policy and Government.

Field seminar is run in conjunction with academic seminar and takes place monthly. During field seminars Fellows have the opportunity to learn about different court programs, observe courthouse operations and speak with experts in the court system throughout the state.

Academic seminar focuses on a critical examination and historical analysis of the California judicial system and its administrative structures, policies and managerial practices in the fall semester. Spring semester includes the study of contemporary institutional issues, intergovernmental relations, alternative administrative practices, policy analysis and implementation strategies.

"The Judicial Fellowship Program is one of our efforts to ensure the continued excellence of California's courts. I have had the opportunity to work with Judicial Fellows and have been inspired by their contributions and their commitment. The Fellows gain valuable experience working with the finest judiciary in the world, and we encourage the talent we need now and in the future to manage the largest court system in the nation."

“Under the guidance of my mentor, I conducted research, evaluated court programs and services, and reported findings to both court administrators and judges. My main project involved developing and carrying out a language access training for court staff. Our academic and field seminars bridged the practice of working in a courthouse with theories of court administration. The seminars served as open spaces to share, question, and discuss contemporary issues facing the courts, such as access to justice. More importantly, seminars helped build community amongst the Fellows and program staff.”
