

14TH ANNUAL FALL ETHICS SYMPOSIUM

The Ethics of Having Children

THE ETHICS OF HAVING CHILDREN

Decisions we make about bringing other people into existence and parenting them are ethically fraught, and perhaps increasingly so. Additionally, these decisions are influenced by, and in turn influence, any number of developments in medical practice, public policy and law. Join us for an important conversation about the ethics of having children!

November 18, 2019

CSU Sacramento | Redwood Room, University Union

8:30 am: Morning Reception (continental breakfast)

8:45 am: Introduction and Welcome

9-10:20 am: Session 1 | Why You Should Learn to Love the (Population) Bomb | Lyman Stone, American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research

10:30-11:50 am: Session 2 | Birth in an Ethical "Upside Down" | Lauren Hall, Rochester Institute of Technology

1:30-2:50 pm: Session 3 | Everyday Pregnancy and the Ethics of Expecting | Jessica Flanigan, University of Richmond

November 19, 2019

Cosumnes River College | Recital Hall

8:30 am: Morning Reception (continental breakfast)

8:45 am: Introduction and Welcome

9:00-10:20 am: Session 4 | Giving Birth While Black: Racial Disparities In Maternal Mortality Rates and What It Means For Black Womanhood | Keisha Ray, McGovern Center for Humanities and Ethics, University of Texas

10:30-11:50 am: Session 5 | Should Parents Instill Their Values in Their Children? | Michael Austin, Eastern Kentucky University

1:30-2:50 pm: Session 6 | The Duty to Adopt | Tina Rulli, UC Davis

This event is free and open to the general public.

For further information, please contact

Professor Kyle Swan, kyle.swan@csus.edu or Professor Rick Schubert, schuber@crc.losrios.edu

