

BETH HENDRICK

Teacher, freelance writer, and education expert

bhendrick@ccee-ca.org

Beth Hendrick currently serves as a program specialist with California Collaborative for Educational Excellence. She joined CCEE in 2020 after serving as a special education classroom teacher for over a decade. For nearly twenty years, Beth also lent her talents as a freelance writer and education expert to various agencies, publications and websites. You can read some of her published works by visiting Seattle PI: Education, specialeducationguide.com and the-classroom.com.

Truly a product of California public schools, Beth holds a master's degree in education from San Diego State University, a bachelor's degree in literature from California State University, Chico and she is currently pursuing a doctorate in education leadership at California State University, Sacramento. Her research interests include topics in special education, gender inequality in leadership roles, and communications systems within public schools. A world traveler, she has visited over 20 countries and plans to add to that list every year. In her free time—if she ever has any—she can be found at the yoga studio, getting muddy in her vegetable garden or getting lost on a trail in the mountains with her husband, daughter and two freeloading miniature poodles.
