FACS' Summer Fashion Academy Featured on Good Day Sacramento

In Summer 2018, Family & Consumer Sciences, in collaboration with the College of Continuing Education, offered the Summer Fashion Academies 2018 to local high school students and was featured on Good Day Sacramento. This academy was a one-week program that offered lessons and activities that examined both the design and business aspects of fashion. Professor Emeritus and Fashion Academy Instructor Ernie Olson co-lead the academy with Sacramento State instructor Esther Amato. Olson brought out the artistic side of the high school students in learning to sketch fashion designs while Amato built on the students' artistry with introducing them to design and merchandising. Over the course of five days, students were able to participate in several enriching activities that included:

- Explored and learned how an idea becomes a product and learned how products are marketed and merchandised to the public.
- Learned the fundamentals of fashion illustration, while rediscovering the art of hand drawing as a tool for creating vibrant

Dean's Corner

As we begin a new academic year, I want to highlight an exciting new venue for classes, a major forthcoming event, and an influx of new talent for the College.

Starting in late August, SSIS will offer its first classes at Sacramento State Downtown, the recently purchased building at 304 S Street. Indeed, most Department of Public Policy and Administration graduate seminars will be in the new building. Yes, we have reported on impending class offerings in prior newsletters. However, if you have ever been involved in your own renovation project you know that these things can take somewhat (much?) longer than expected—even if you do not have to deal with the State Fire Marshal. Yet those of you who have seen the refurbished building have extolled its virtues as a place for instruction, events, etc. If you have not yet toured the building, I urge you to do so and believe you will be impressed. I also expect students will be very pleased about the opportunities presented at the new location.

Regarding events, we look forward to perhaps the biggest one of the year at Sacramento State: the 5th International Conference on Genocide. While the final schedule of speakers and panels is not yet set, it appears likely that the event will draw major figures from across the globe. For taking the lead in planning this event, I wish to thank Dr. Boatamo Mosupyoe and the Department of Ethnic Studies. I am deeply proud of their efforts to bring people together to address the scourge of genocide.

I am thrilled to indicate that the College is welcoming ten new full-time faculty members from seven different departments (Anthropology, Ethnic Studies, Family & Consumer Sciences, Political Science, Psychology, Public Policy & Administration, and Sociology). This is an impressive group of scholars, with significant prior teaching and research experience.

Finally, I wish to thank all the SSIS faculty and staff for making 2017-18 such a successful year. In particular, I want to thank two people stepping down from department chair roles for their excellent work in those positions: Boatamo Mosupyoe (Ethnic Studies) and Raghu Trichur (Anthropology). I will try to avoid the temptation of concluding this means their talents are necessarily available for every other project that comes along.

I wish you an excellent start to the fall semester!

Interim Dean

Launch of New Peace Corps Prep Program

A new Peace Corps Certificate Program was recently approved through the College of SSIS' curriculum committee and will be launching in Fall 2018. Sacramento State is the first campus in the CSU system to offer such a program for undergraduates. The Peace Corps Prep program was established in 2007 and has partnerships with 75 academic institutions across the country, now including Sac State.

Developing such a program for our campus was the brainchild of Julian Heather, professor of English and the Peace Corps Prep program advisor at Sac State. The campus already had a connection to a partnership program with the Peace Corps called Masters International, through the Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL). Dr. Heather first learned about the prep program when he attended the Masters International Coordinators conference in Washington D.C. in September of 2014.

When the Peace Corps decided to end all of its Masters International partnerships in 2016, Dr. Heather thought that developing this program might be a good way to continue the connection between Sac State and the Peace Corps. With Sac State having one of the most diverse student populations in the nation, coming in 4th in the U.S. News & World Report's 2018 rankings of the top "Campus Ethnic Diversity Regional Universities" in the West, Dr. Heather felt that the campus' values matched those of the Peace Corps very well. He also felt that a prep program's focus on encouraging a diverse applicant pool for Peace Corps services is one that our campus can easily support. Thus began several years of work on the development of this program.

Dr. Heather worked with many people on campus to develop this program, in several divisions on campus and several individual faculty. In SSIS he specifically worked with both Associate Deans, Marya Endriga and Dianne Hyson, and he worked with Ajay Singh in Environmental Studies, Greg Kim-Ju from Psychology and Asian Studies, and several Department Chairs. When it came time for approving the program through the curriculum process, the proposal came through SSIS because of its interdisciplinary nature; although, the choices of courses for the students to take include almost every discipline on campus. The program is open to all undergraduates, regardless of major. Students receive specialized training that prepares them for international services, instruction in a foreign language, intercultural competence and professional leadership. Students also gain skills that prepare them for their chosen Peace Corps Work Sector including Agriculture, Community Economic Development, Environment, Health, Youth in Development, and Education.

Model United Nations (UN) Students Receive Several Awards

This past March, during the week of spring break, the Political Science Department’s Model United Nations (UN) delegation traveled to New York with Political Science Professor Steven Iverson to participate in the 2018 National Model UN conference. The students earned several awards in recognition of their hard work.

- Explored the foundations of fashion design and learned basic design skills.
- Obtained "hands-on" knowledge from fashion industry professionals, such as fashion designers, jewelry designers, photographers, stylists, and fashion event coordinators.
- Met other students who share their passion for fashion.
- Had access to the resources and instructors of a world-class fashion institution.
- Worked individually and in teams to complete a variety of creative projects.

- Produced a collective student driven fashion showcase and celebration to end the week.

The academy included a Final Fashion Academy Showcase held at the University Union where students' design creations and fashion illustration collections were presented to a guest audience. This allowed the students to not only showcase their creativity, but gave them a platform on which to build a sense of confidence and pave the way for professional opportunities.

Student Fashion Association: Spring 2018 Fashion Show

The Student Fashion Association of Sacramento State hosted their SFA SPRING 2018 FASHION SHOW: DIVINE DIVERSITY in the Union Ballroom under the guidance of Professor Dong Shen, and Lecturers Kimberly Caldwell and Esther Amato MBA. Collaborating with the Costume Collection and the One World Initiative with a focus on the 2018 theme of "Global Perspectives on Community", the show highlighted the diversity of our students based on culture, community, and connection.

2018 Outstanding Graduate Student

Erin Stumpf, Public Policy & Administration graduate student received the 2018 Outstanding Graduate Student Award*. At the time of nomination, Erin had a 3.967 GPA, which was the highest GPA of her cohort. She served as the Treasurer for two years for the Graduate Association of Students in Public Policy and Administration. Outside of the university, Erin is heavily involved in the real estate community, working as a Real Estate Broker and serves as an active member of the CA Real Estate Association. Her nominator believes she will go on to play a leading role in real estate public policy.

LIBS Student Receives Frederick Douglass Global Fellowship

Malena Her, a Liberal Studies major, travelled to South Africa this summer for a study abroad program through the Frederick Douglass Global Fellowship program (FDGF). This is a program specifically intended for students from Minority Serving Institutions, such as Sac State, and helps break down the barriers that would otherwise make studying abroad less accessible. This program is one of several initiatives included in a partnership between the Council on International Educational Exchange and the Penn Center for Minority Serving Institutions. According to the FDGF, individuals selected for this program have demonstrated high academic achievement, possess exemplary communications skills, display the hallmarks of self-determination, exhibit characteristics of bold leadership, and have a history of service to others.

Malena is a first generation Hmong American, currently a sophomore at Sac State, and has been involved with the Full Circle Project. Congratulations to Malena and we look forward to hearing about her experiences when she returns to Sac State!

New Faces in the College

Megan Raschig
Anthropology

Megan Raschig is a medical anthropologist whose ethnographic research addresses the intersection of state violence and spiritual healing in Latinx communities in California. Originally from Canada, she completed her PhD at the University of Amsterdam in 2016 and spent the following year as a Postdoctoral Fellow at the University of Virginia, teaching classes on core, critical, and posthumanist themes in medical and cultural anthropology. Megan is thrilled to be joining the Department of Anthropology at Sacramento State and looks forward to meeting and working with students, faculty, and the surrounding community.

Clara Scarry
Anthropology

Dr. Scarry is a biological anthropologist whose research focuses on the evolution of cooperation and collective decision-making within non-human primates, specifically individual strategies to balance the conflicting pressures of within- and between-group competition for resources. Her research addresses not only the ultimate function of collective aggression by males during between-group encounters but also the spatial consequences and physiological mechanisms underpinning the expression of this behavior among non-human primates. To address these questions, she integrates field- and laboratory-based methods, complementing traditional observations with behavioral experiments and hormone analysis.

Ethnic Studies

Dr. Bao Lo is an Assistant Professor at California State University, Sacramento in the Department of Ethnic Studies. Her research interests include U.S. immigration with a focus on the second generation (children of post 1965 immigrants), race and ethnicity, and Asian Americans, with a specialization in Southeast Asian Americans and Hmong Americans.

Henry Gonzalez
Family & Consumer Sciences

Henry Gonzalez is a family scientist. He will join Sacramento State as an Assistant Professor in the Department of Family and Consumer Sciences. Most recently, Henry completed a postdoctoral fellowship at Arizona State University. He received his PhD in Family Studies and Human Development (minor in Public Health) from the University of Arizona, and baccalaureate degrees from UC Davis. His research interests include fatherhood, immigrant and Latinx families, and children's positive development. Henry's research has been supported by NSF, HHS, and the Annie E. Casey Foundation. Henry looks forward to working with students to explore the wonders of family studies.

Sahar Razavi
Political Science

Sahar Razavi earned her PhD in Political Science from Northern Arizona University. She began teaching in Political Science and Women's and Gender Studies in 2013. Razavi's dissertation, Labor, Women, and War in the 1979 Iranian Revolution, investigates the interrelated impacts of competing political forces in the realms of labor, gender, and the Iran-Iraq War on the outcome of the 1979 Iranian revolution. Her research investigates Iranian political and social conflict; religion, politics, and society in the Middle East; and the Iranian diaspora.

Kristina Victor Political Science

Kristina Victor received her PhD in Political Science from UC Davis in 2015. She is very excited to be returning to her alma mater, where she completed her BA (International Relations) and MA (International Affairs). Prior to coming to CSUS, Kristina was a Visiting Assistant Professor for two years at the UC Center Sacramento, where she taught California state politics and policy, and research methods. Her research interests include California politics, Latino politics and representation, and immigration.

Denys Brand Psychology

Denys started working at Sacramento State in August 2018 in the Psychology Department. Born in South Africa, he immigrated to New Zealand at 14, and was awarded his PhD in Psychology from the University of Auckland in 2015. Following his PhD, he completed a three-year post-doc at the University of Kansas in the Department of Applied Behavioral Science. Denys is passionate about the study of behavior and enjoys working alongside undergraduate and graduate students as a teacher and researcher. His research interests include performance feedback, choice behavior, and procedural integrity.

Sharon Flicker Psychology

Sharon Flicker is a clinical psychologist with expertise in Family and Cognitive-Behavioral therapies. Originally from NY, she joins the Department of Psychology from Antioch College. Prior to that, she taught at Asian University for Women in Bangladesh and the University of Maryland University College in both Germany and Japan. Sharon earned her PhD from the University of New Mexico, completed a postdoctoral research fellowship at University of Rochester Medical Center and spent a year volunteering in Ghana and Peru. Her most recent research focuses on attachment bonds in relationship types that have received scant research attention, including arranged marriages and consensual non-monogamy.

Sara McClellan Public Policy & Administration

Sara McClellan will join the Department of Public Policy & Administration as an Assistant Professor after working as a public sector and nonprofit manager, adjunct professor, researcher, and consultant. Sara earned her PhD in Organizational Communication at the University of Colorado at Boulder, her Masters in Public Administration from USC, and a B.A. in Liberal Studies from CSU Monterey Bay. Sara served as an adjunct professor for the USC Price School of Public Policy and Annenberg School for Communication and Journalism. Sara studies innovative organizing and communication practices designed to improve health, safety, and education outcomes in rapidly changing communities.

Faculty/Staff/Student/Department Highlights

Amanda Shigihara Sociology

Amanda Shigihara received her PhD in 2014 from the University of Colorado Boulder. Prior to joining Sacramento State, she was an Assistant Professor at the State University of New York Old Westbury. Her teaching and research areas include social psychology, deviance, criminology, life course, work and occupations, research methods, and sociological theory. She is currently examining the social psychological factors influencing women's reproductive choices.

Welcome,
New Faculty!

Public Policy and Administration is pleased to welcome Sara McClellan as a new assistant professor. She comes to Sac State with a wealth of state and local consulting experience in public administration. As evidence, in the spring and summer of 2018 she: (1) gave the CSUMB College of Education & College of Science commencement keynote address, (2) designed and delivered workshops on "Power, Influence & Political Acumen" for government leaders for the USC Los Angeles County Executive Leadership Program and CPS Human Resources, and (3) designed and delivered a voter engagement training for UC Davis student government leaders.

Su Jin Jez (faculty, PPA): (1) received the 2017-2018 SSIS Outstanding Scholarly and Creative Activities Award, (2) served as an SSIS Dean's Faculty Fellow in Fall 2017 with a focus on planning for academic components related to developing a School of Public Affairs, (3) accepted a position in January as Director of the CSU Student Success Network, and (4) presented an invited talk in June at the University of Witwatersrand in Johannesburg, South Africa on "Can Systems Thinking Transform Education? An Analysis of Higher Education Reform in the US and Implications for Language in Education Policy."

Andrea Venezia (faculty, PPA; Executive Director, EdInsights) continued her extensive service as executive director of the Education Insights Center at Sac State, which included the highlights of: (1) selection as one of eight fellows for the inaugural statewide Senior Equity Fellow program with Education Trust West, (2) publishing a chapter with Mike Kirst in an edited collection on Shaping Education Policy: Power and Process, (3) invited speaker at the Office of the Governor, Office of Planning and Research, and Department of Finance "Conversation on the Master Plan for Higher Education in California", and (4) joined the Board of Sac State's Center for Teaching and Learning.

Rob Wassmer (faculty, PPA; chairperson, PPA) (1) published two chapters in a textbook of students readings on Applied Policy Research: Concepts and Cases, (2) continued writing a bi-monthly column with Ron Fisher for the practitioner journal State Tax Notes, (3) completed a consulting report with MPPA student Nathan Fesler on "Should California Adopt a Fire-Barrier Standard for Upholstered Furniture: A Review of the Previous Academic Evidence and a new Benefit-Cost Analysis" for the CA Department of Consumer Affairs, and (4) presented three new research papers at conferences sponsored by the National Tax Association (Philadelphia), Federal Reserve/ Upjohn Institute (Atlanta), Western Economic Association (Vancouver), and APPAM (Mexico City).

Ted Lascher (faculty, PPA; dean, SSIS) continues to serve as acting dean of SSIS, while still teaching a PPA course, and finishing a coauthored book on the state ballot initiative published by the University of Michigan Press and titled Initiatives without Engagement: A Realistic Account of the Secondary Effects of Direct Democracy.

Ajay Singh (faculty, ENVS) contributed to an article published in the Eureka Alert newsletter. The article was about opposition to the Endangered Species Act (ESA) and who may be responsible for policy changes by the Trump administration and members of Congress that would strip protections of certain species and make it more difficult to protect those threatened with extinction. You can read the article here: https://www.eurekalert.org/pub_releases/2018-07/osu-mas071718.php Counseling Services to host a "Farm-to-Fork Seasonal Tasting on the Bridge." The bridge activity has raised funds to support the ASI Food Pantry ($3,000 in 2016) and the College Assistance Migrant Program ($4,100 in 2017). Each time, tickets have quickly sold out. We invite everyone to engage with our theme, 'Sustainability' (especially inclusive of social sustainability). Please be watching for details during the fall semester and consider projects/ assignments on this theme that your students, or you, would like to share at a festival/poster session. Please contact Lynn Hanna at lhanna@csus.edu in FACS or Jennifer Campbell at jennifer.campbell@csus.edu at Student Health, with ideas and questions. The event is scheduled for May 3, 2019.

FACS Department's Didactic Program in Dietetics (DPD) and Dietetic Internship (DI) programs continue to flourish. In the 2017/18 academic year both programs were fully accredited for another 7 years by the National Accreditation Council for Education in Nutrition and Dietetics. The DI increased from 8 interns per year, to 10 beginning in fall 2018. Noteworthy, is that in spring 2018, 87% of the FACS DPD students who applied to a DI were accepted compared to the national average of 62%.

FACS concentrations are in the process of elevating to stand-alone degrees in Fashion Merchandizing and Management, Nutrition and Food, and Human Development and Family Studies. More to come....

FACS is welcoming Dr. Henry Gonzalez to the Family Studies concentration in fall 2018. We also are welcoming five additional lecturers for the fall 2018 semester: Alumna, Nancy Hamler PhD, Brian Knirk, Ed.D., Stephanie Spencer M.S. for the Nutrition and Food Concentration; and Anna Fowler B.F.A., for the Fashion Merchandising and Design Concentration.

Wendy Buchan (faculty, FACS) organized and the 16th annual Dietetic Internship Symposium in collaboration with the Northern Area California Nutrition and Dietetic Association and University of California Davis Medical Center with more than ten programs presenting and represented (CSU Sacramento, CSU Chico, CSU Fresno, UCDMC, UC Davis, UC San Francisco Medical Center, Napa State hospital, San Francisco State University, Utah Distance DI, Central Valley WIC DI). Over 125 students attended from CSU Sacramento, UCD and CSU Chico.

Aya Ida (faculty, SOC) received the 2018 Early Career Award for Innovation in Teaching Sociology from the Pacific Sociological Association.
