

To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing this letter to indicate how greatly Professor David Lang of the Economics Department made a very positive impact on both my life. When I first came to Sac State I declared myself a computer science major, that did not last long. After that I still was unsure as to what I wanted to do so I became a business major. Having still not found what I really liked I signed up for an Economics 1B class, microeconomics. Professor Lang was the instructor and from the first day I enjoyed his sense of humor, true care for his students, and his vast knowledge on the subject of economics. After just a few weeks in his class I decided to change my major for the last time to Economics. I stuck with this and recently graduated with my Bachelors in Economics. The great thing about Professor Lang was his availability to help students at any time. During my years at Sac State I could drop by almost any time and get help, and he was always willing to help. Even when I had a class from another instructor I would still go back to him for help and although I was not a current student he never hesitated to assist me. Professor Lang has a great teaching technique that made even the harder parts of economics easy to understand. Throughout my years at Sac State I took as many classes as I could from Professor Lang and even contemplated waiting another semester to graduate so that I could take my last two economic classes from him. I wish Professor Lang only the best and feel extremely lucky to have had him as a professor.

Sincerely,

Justin Toenyas
